What do I do with my dolls?

Many of us have dolls passed down from family or treasures of our own. There comes a point when one wonders what to do with them. Since at the CFHS we now have space to display and make use of our collection, there has been an increasing interest in dolls. We are getting questions about the dolls in the collection but also about what to do with dolls our members and visitors possess.

This is not a simple question but here are some of the considerations that you may want to keep in mind. Often these questions, like the dolls themselves, remain on the shelf or in a box until decisions are made by someone else, or in haste. I think it is worth considering the options that exist.

Before anything else, I would urge people to ask family members, but also others with whom you are close, if they are interested. I was certain the teddy bear of my mother's would not be wanted, but in fact it was very warmly received by its new family. This is a way of passing on a treasure of the past to the world of the future.

If that is not productive, there are basically two directions you can take. You can sell or donate the dolls. Each of these options has positives and negatives. However, before thinking more about these options, it is important to realize that the market for dolls has been in a serious slump and I do not see any real signs of it improving anytime soon. Always, the quality of the doll, the rarer (generally), the more appealing, the better the condition, the more the value has held. That said, even the finest of dolls have taken a major hit in terms of market value.

If you consider selling through an auction house, realize that they will be very selective, wanting older, perfect (or near perfect) condition, and the more original the better. It is relatively easy on you, but items may not sell or bring less than expected. If selling online, while you have few up-front costs, there is a lot of preparation required prior to listing and learning how the system works. If you sell privately, through ads or sales, the pool of buyers will be much smaller. If you want to sell the dolls as a collection, you will have to find dealers interested in them. You might take pictures to a local doll show, or antique show where you see dolls to gauge interest.

You may also donate dolls to a museum. If accepted, you know they will be valued and cared for. However, many museums like CFHS, have limited space. At CFHS we have particular interest in dolls that have a Chagrin Falls connection but also in individual dolls that fill holes in our collection. Generally these are dolls that date up to the 1960's.

We have prepared a handout that goes into these considerations in more detail,

Hope you find this helpful.

November Program

It was standing room only in the Community Room on November 17 when Kevin Callahan delivered his presentation on the Van Sweringen Brothers. Clearly a topic of interest to many, the crowd of more than 70 people was enthralled with the lives of the two brothers. Mantis James and Oris Paxton. Callahan's extensive knowledge of "The Vans" enhanced with photographs of the the building of Terminal Tower, Shaker Heights and their residences made for a fascinating program.

He chronicled the lives of the two bachelors from their beginnings on a farm outside Wooster, OH, to their move to Cleveland as young boys where they started out selling newspapers to make money. He described the growth of their real estate and railroad empire which, at it's peak, was worth approximately $3 billion and the devastation that followed with the Great Depression. Callahan interestingly shared a personal connection with the building of Terminal Tower. A family business, Callahan Sand & Gravel provided the sand for the base but with the advent of the depression losses, never got paid and went out of business.

Thank you to Hospitality Chairs, Patti and Jeff Widmar for providing the refreshments and volunteers Ken Kvacek, Jo Roeder, Laura Gorretta and John Bourisseau for their work to make this program possible.

The next program, on December 10 will be the "1940s Christmas Open House". We still need homemade cookies or tea sandwiches. If you are able to help out, please contact Anne Burr at 440-241-2678 or aburr51@gmail.com or Patti Widmar at 216-409-1455 or pwidmar@roadrunner.com.

Curator's Report

"New Years Past"

From the Exponent, the weekly Chagrin Falls newspaper published from 1874-1964, we glean the following information.

"New Years Eve, 1876. One hundred and ten couples attended the New Years dance at the Irving House on New Years Eve. The party was generally orderly, is spoken of as highly satisfactory to those attending. The Centennial year was ushered into Chagrin Falls in a fitting manner. The bells on the churches and the school building (The Asbury Seminary and later Union School, now the site of our Intermediate School) were rung and a general fusillade of firecrackers was heard. The authorities had the new lock up lighted and ready for business on New Years Eve. Fortunately, there was no pressing need for its services."
